Open Source Health CEO Sonya Satveit to Speak at SXSW Health and MedTech Conference – March 16, 2015

Toronto, Ontario, Canada – February 17, 2015: Open Source Health Inc. (CSE:OSH), (Frankfurt:OOS), is leading the digital transformation of integrative medicine with its cloud-based healthcare platform. OSH puts control into the hands of women to educate, advocate and collaborate on their own healthcare and is pleased to announce that Sonya Satveit, CEO and Founder of Open Source Health will take the stage with other thought-leaders at the SXSW Conference in Austin, Texas on March 16, 2015.

“SXSW brings together the most creative people and the brightest minds in technology, film and music so being asked to speak at the first SX Health and MedTech Expo is an honour,” says Sonya Satveit. “This festival is world-renowned with over 72,000 people attending and is a great venue for OSH to communicate the disruptive impact we are about to make in the healthcare industry”.

The session is titled “Women Leading Changes in Digital Health”. With women traditionally seen as the nurturing caretakers of the healthcare industry, it is not surprising that female entrepreneurs are incorporating innovative technologies to transform healthcare. This transformation goes beyond wearables, IT systems, and medical devices as technology is also being used to engage patients, their families and communicate patient needs and wishes for their care.
